The exhibition takes its title from Benjamin Buchloh's seminal article, "Conceptual Art 1962-1969: From the Aesthetic of Administration to the Critique of Institutions" (1990), in which he claims that the aesthetic identity of the middle class is one of administrating labour and production. The resulting exhibition reverses the roles of administrator and producer, delegating the production of artistic content to those who normally manage the financial structures underpinning the production ...

Conceptual art, also referred to as conceptualism, is art in which the concept(s) or idea(s) involved in the work take precedence over traditional aesthetic, technical, and material concerns. Some works of conceptual art, sometimes called installations, may be constructed by anyone simply by following a set of written instructions. This method was fundamental to American artist Sol LeWitt's ...

'Conceptual Art 1962-1969: From the Aesthetic of Administration to the Critique of Institutions' My work is not Duchampian or anti-Duchampian. I wanted people to accept the value of these sculptures because they were functioning as sculptures, not because they were associated with the factory, the foundry, the quarry, the man-things that in those days seemed to mean something. If I put it ...

'Conceptual Art 1962-1969: From the Aesthetic of Administration to the Critique of Institutions' Would you want to differentiate the function of writing from the function of the object in your work, since the writing does not in all instances take on a material, sculptural form of presentation; it can also take on a merely typographic, scriptural form.

Why Are Conceptual Artists Painting Again

This expression was (arguably) coined by Benjamin Buchloh in an essay published in October magazine in 1989 under the title "Conceptual Art 1962-1969: From the Aesthetics of Administration to the Critique of Institutions". Institutional critique first appeared as a form of conceptual art during the 1960's. It is a practice that wants to make visible, to reveal, the inner workings of art institutions thus questioning their demarches on a deeper level than the appearing (i.e. funding ...
