ROBERT C. PALMER - University of Houston Law Center

In English Law in the Age of the Black Death, 1348-1381, Palmer explores how laws in medieval England were shaped by the bubonic plague. Palmer particularly focuses on the Ordinance and Statute of Labourers, which was passed during this period. The ordinance held both the upper classes and the lower classes to more stringent guidelines in honoring contracts. The upper classes were to be held ...

The Black Death was a bubonic plague pandemic, which reached England in June 1348. It was the first and most severe manifestation of the Second Pandemic, caused by Yersinia pestis bacteria.The term "Black Death" was not used until the late 17th century. Originating in Asia, [citation needed] it spread west along the trade routes across Europe and arrived on the British Isles from the English ...

Palmer. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press. 1993.

Robert C. Palmer writes in English Law in the Age of the Black Death, “England was already governed by a vigorous and determined king with a dedicated and efficient council tending toward increased centralization with power able to be exercised autocratically for periods. The reaction to the Black Death was to increase state power but emphasized delegation and cooperation among the upper ...
