It is truly a cultural and architectural history – not just a history of landscape design. You can turn to any page and learn so much, even about things you may already know something about. The author is a master at bringing to bear culture, philosophy, religion, art, literature, and technology to each topic. It is dense, but if it weren't, this book would be huge. I will be reading this book for months and years and I'm so happy to have found it and recommend it to anyone, whether or not ...

Start your review of Landscape Design: A Cultural and Architectural History. Write a review . Jul 24, 2016 Sean Newman rated it liked it. It was informative review of landscape design through history. A dry read not very well laid out and the typeset makes it feel like antiquated text book from 80's that your eyes grow heavy a paragraph in. That complaint aside it expanded my knowledge of ...

For the period before 1800, the history of landscape architecture, formally landscape gardening, is largely that of master planning and garden design for manor houses, palaces and royal properties, religious complexes, and centers of government. An example is the extensive work by André Le Nôtre for King Louis XIV of France at the Palace of Versailles.

We typically understand this when architecture uses obvious symbols and design language – a temple or church form that symbolises a religion; a smoke stack representing industry and production. Here an expected form is augmented by expected decoration. But, stained-glass depictions of biblical scenes or the Oriental excess of Auckland's Civic Theatre are only one way to send these cultural ...

Garden and landscape design is a substantial part but by no means all of the work of the profession of landscape architecture. Defined as "the art of arranging land and the objects upon it for human use and enjoyment," landscape architecture also includes site planning, land planning, master planning, urban design, and environmental planning.

Architecture in this country does not define itself in any singular way, however, there is a prevailing perception. To counter that perception is to reopen the need to link architecture to the wider world of policy – policy other than simple planning regulations – and this involves reopening the question of architecture's relation to culture.
