Landscape Memory And History Pamela J Stewart Andrew Strathern

Pamela J. Stewart and Andrew Strathern DOI: 10.2307/j.ctt18fsc3.3 The topic of landscape has recently come more to the fore in anthropological interests. Ethnographers have realised from their field experiences how perceptions of and values attached to landscape encode values and fix memories to places that become sites of historical identity.

The speeches demonstrate the embeddedness of the people in their landscape, their conscious awareness of their history within their origin places, and their concerns for the future of their group. Their stories are engaging ones that reflect the cultural richness of their country. They indicate the rhetorical powers and astute sense of occasion that leaders exhibit, as well as their thoughtful ...
