"Darryl Whetter's The Push & the Pull is a brash, vibrant, melancholy, sexy, and finally uplifting book about a mesmerizing father, the son who can't tear himself away, and the women who make them grow up. Whetter is intoxicated with language. He writes like a dream in a quick, urbane, and witty style. His women are gorgeous independent creatures; his men are large and infuriating; and when love happens it's explosive, passionate, and grand. A lovely first novel." – Douglas Glover

Today: Darryl Whetter (?A Sharp Tooth in the Fur?, ?The Push & the Pull?) This summer, I'm reading Sapiens: A Brief History of Humankind, by Yuval Noah Harari, and its sequel Homo Deus: A Brief History of Tomorrow. I'm keen and able to dive into these dense, sweeping accounts of human development during summer because of two key facts of my life: writing and subsiding my writing as ...

Andrew Day embarks on a bicycle trip from Halifax to Kingston, his childhood home. As he goes, the dual narratives of Andrew's life emerge: the slow, painful death of his father and the disappearance of Betty, who may be lost to him forever. He contemplates, too, the nature of desire. En route, Andrew sloughs off his fears, material goods, and attachments.
