While it can be nice to start researching the weather well before your planned climb, remember that weather forecasts will only start to gain precision as you get within days of the start date. It is nearly impossible to access a forecast more than 10 days out. So, if you're looking at the weather months or weeks ahead, try to look for general trends for the area – monthly highs and lows ...

Accurate and timely mountain weather forecasts

Met Office Mountain Weather-Again, a forecast for every major mountain area in the UK. In winter they provide fell top reports for Snowdonia and the Lakes. Since their forecast went 'risk' based I've found that they seem to err too far on the side of caution and don't need much excuse to flag thunder as a risk. Whether it's the unsettled weather we've had making it more difficult ...
